

SCALER

You belong here.

Hey Meera! Really glad we got to talk today -- I could hear how much thought you've put into this, and that tension between what your parents want and what you actually want for yourself is real. This doc is just my honest attempt to answer the three things that were clearly weighing on you most.

Plain answers for you

Can Scaler guarantee you a job if you turn down the government offer?

I want to be straight with you here, because you deserve that: no program can legally guarantee a job, and anyone who says otherwise is overselling. What Scaler does have is 900+ hiring partners and a community of 100,000+ alumni -- which means real companies are actively recruiting from this pool, not just listed on a brochure. The honest framing is this: the government job is certain but fixed; a product company role has more variables but also a much higher ceiling, and Scaler is built to close that gap with live classes, 1:1 mentorship with practicing professionals, and AI mock interviews. For placement data specific to your track and background, I'd be happy to share specifics on your next call -- I don't want to quote a number that doesn't actually apply to you.

Rs.3.5L when your family earns less than that in a year -- how does this actually work?

You said it plainly and I heard it: "Rs.3.5L is more than what my family earns in a year." That is a serious number and I am not going to pretend otherwise. EMI options do exist for Scaler Academy, which means you are not expected to pay it all upfront -- the goal is to spread it so repayments can come from your first salary rather than your parents' savings right now. The exact EMI structure, whether any scholarships apply to your cohort, and what the real monthly number looks like for you -- those are things admissions can confirm precisely, and I'd be happy to share specifics on your next call so you have actual figures to show your parents, not vague reassurances.

If you don't clear the entrance test, does that mean you're not good enough?

Meera, the fact that you're nervous about this actually tells me you're taking it seriously -- that's a good sign, not a red flag. The entrance test is a gate for admission, not a verdict on your potential; it exists so Scaler can place you in the right cohort, not to weed out people who care. You are coming in at 0 YoE from a Tier-3 college -- that is exactly the profile the Academy is built for (it covers 0-7 YoE engineers), so you are not an outlier here. Retake rules and any prep resources available to you before the test are something admissions can walk you through -- I'd be happy to share specifics on your next call, because those details can vary and I don't want to guess wrong on something this important to you.

The one thing worth remembering from today

You told me you want to work at a product company -- that is not a naive dream, it is a specific goal, and it is worth taking seriously. The government job will likely still feel safe six months from now; the question is whether you want to spend that time building toward what you actually want. The entrance test is the smallest possible next step -- it costs you nothing except a few hours, and it opens the door to a real conversation about whether this path makes sense for your situation. Take the test, see where you land, and then we can talk numbers and next steps with full information in front of us.

Fees & EMI (ask admissions for yours)

Fees are significant. Plan EMI and options with admissions so you see real numbers.

Example reference only: roughly Rs. 3.5L program fee cited in admissions materials; tenure and EMI depend on partner and cohort.

Others who started similarly

Stories are illustrative only. Admissions can walk through cohort fit with you honestly.

We map financing and pace with families when that is the blocker.

The entrance check is commitment and aptitude based. Ask admissions for preparation notes for your cohort.

Entrance test - what we tell people

It is needed for admissions. Ask your BDA what format and prep look like today. Failed once does not mean you are unwelcome forever; verify rules on your next call.

Take the entrance test when you feel ready -- it is just the first step, not a final judgment, and it is the only way to get to the conversation where we can answer your real questions with actual numbers.

Prepared for Meera Patel | 08 May 2026 | Scaler Academy

One honest conversation at a time.